

With the increased amount of cooking at home, I reorganized our spice rack. It's a thing of beauty!

I reorganized the living room in my apartment home as an electronic-free zone, and I sit on the couch to either read a book or look at the river outside through the big window while my new friend, Mr. Potato plant, keeps me company. This has helped me declutter my mind as well.

I've reflected on the small things in life which bring me joy, like animals—so we decided it was time to get a dog we named Beans!

I'm reorganizing my home office to become a more settled environment! I decided to move an older filing cabinet to the room I work out of to set up files instead of piling things on a table. There are always things that need to be organized...

An ongoing project in my backyard is to redesign and add a swimming pool!

I've moved away from handwritten notes and folders and utilizing Microsoft One-Note much more frequently to keep an organized and searchable database of meeting and task notes.

It's been very therapeutic to clean out closets and donate the things we're no longer using. My linen closet, a known black hole, has never looked so good!

I took all of the important paperwork once on my desk and filed it into a new organizer.

I have reorganized my schedule and taken advantage of Arora's flex hours so that I can start work a bit later and take advantage of my home gym at least 3 days a week. Exercising in the morning, I feel so much sharper and productive!

I'm reorganizing my time to improve my time management by dividing my time based on the project deliverables and deadlines. I'm also planning and adapting to the new environment / situation to better cope with project expectations, and following a strict schedule that is shared with the household.
